What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4)?

SMTC, the newest player in the Philippine tech industry, is launching a new powerful blockchain ID called BlockID. It aims to identify individuals using a combination of face recognition, voice recognition, biometric thumbprint scanning and blockchain-based technology. BlockID, built on the blockchain, has been developed to provide a streamlined identity authentication process for the global market. It is scalable, safe, efficient and convenient. The system was engineered from scratch to have a minimum number of components to maximize efficiency, and a minimal scalability, while still being decentralized. The SMTC BlockID features a biometric thumbprint scanner that can be used to scan a person's thumb in less than one second. It is, however, not usable as a one-size-fits-all solution. It is considered as an identity based on the neural (brain) or biometric-focused authentication technology. It is rather an added value feature that can also be utilized to replace the traditional password. This saves time and space and reduces the risk of data breaches. Taking individual identity as their central pillar, SMTC has created the BlockID in the form of a decentralized and transparent platform that integrates all the features of blockchain-based technology. The BlockID is like a "blockchain passport" that provides a convenient and secure identity management ecosystem. It allows users to create a trusted profile of their identity, it is based on the data of not just one, but of several sources. It will also provide a convenient "Sign-in with identity" authentication feature that is based on the Ethereum protocol and secured through the use of private keys. The SMTC BlockID will be launched on the 14th of August at the SMTC Demo Day held in Secaucus, New Jersey, USA. For more information about SMTC and BlockID, you can visit their website at "Every individual deserves to own and control their data and identity, especially in a world of rapidly evolving technology. We are honored to introduce an innovative and user-friendly identity management platform, the SMTC BlockID, aiming to solve the tedious and time-consuming identity verification process."
