. â,¬ to the other amount. â,¬ i donâ€™t care to.. jean jacques forgadget 01. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of obtaining microbe-free blood and a kit for obtaining microbe-free blood. 2. Description of the Prior Art To obtain microbe-free blood it is necessary to remove the microbes or microorganisms present in the blood. A complete disinfection of the blood, however, is difficult and time consuming and the use of a preservative solution in blood transfusion is controversial. As a method of preparing a blood transfusion for human use, attention has been paid to a method wherein the blood is treated by heat and ultrasonics while a preservative solution is added to the blood. Such blood preparations are disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. 47368/1972 and Japanese Laid-Open Patent Application No. 106376/1978. In the former publication, blood is treated by heat and ultrasonics while a preservative solution is added to the blood, and in the latter publication, a preservative solution is added to the blood that is treated by heat and ultrasonics. Although these methods of preparing blood have some merits, they are not entirely satisfactory in that the preservative solution is usually added to the blood just prior to the application of heat and ultrasonics. Accordingly, the preservative solution will diffuse with the blood so that some of the preservative solution will remain in the blood at the time of transfusion. Thus, when blood is prepared by such methods, the blood is not completely microbe-free. When blood is transfused, preservatives usually remain in the blood so that the desired prophylactic effects are not obtained. In addition, in the methods of preparing blood by heat and ultrasonics, anticoagulants usually remain in the blood at the time of transfusion. In blood transfusion, the patient is usually in an altered state for an extended period of time so that the remaining anticoagulants may cause infectious diseases such as coagulation disorders, pyogenic infections and tumors. When blood is prepared by the above method, a unit of blood contains a volume of about 100 ml, and the microorganisms (for example, bacteria, mold, fungus, yeast and the like) present in the blood can be removed only when the blood is treated in a system of a volume of
