Analysis of the cellular content of virus-transformed plants has traditionally involved examination of DNA extracted from the transformed plant tissue, followed by Southern hybridization. The technique has allowed the detection of single copy genes inserted into the genome of the transformed plant as well as the mapping of these genes by hybridization of DNA from the plant tissue to specific probes. We have adapted the technique of electrophoretic analysis of virion proteins to the study of the contents of small volumes of transformed plant tissue. This technique enabled a rapid and sensitive assessment of the viral content of virus-transformed plants which, we believe, would not be possible using the traditional Southern hybridization technique. Q: using extern in glsl shader fails i'm trying to use a shader in C++. the shader compiles ok. the main function works well. but i can't use extern: main.cpp #include #include #include #include #include extern "C" { #include "../lib/shaders/light0.vert.glsl" #include "../lib/shaders/light0.frag.glsl" } int main(void) { //graphics init glm::mat4 projection = glm::perspective(45.0f, (float)640 / (float)480, 0.1f, 100.0f); glm::mat4 model = glm::
