Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to semiconductor memory devices, and more specifically to a semiconductor memory device having a test mode controller. 2. Description of the Related Art Semiconductor memory devices may include two types of fail bit map. One is a failure map which is a map table obtained by a test, in which memory cells storing data "0" are set to be test fail bits, and the other is a spare map which is a map table obtained by a process of actually testing defective memory cells. The fail bit map can be changed depending upon a level of a power supply voltage applied to the memory device. It is therefore desirable that the fail bit map is changed depending upon a power supply voltage which is supplied to the memory device. Meanwhile, a conventional semiconductor memory device of the burst I/O type performs a test on a core region, and a system is disconnected from the core region after completion of the test. As a result, while a fail bit map is being changed, data which should be stored in the memory cells is destroyed and thus the data is lost. Therefore, a fail bit map is required to be set to a fixed value, which is determined beforehand. A conventional fail bit map table is provided on an LSI chip. Since a memory cell for storing data having a predetermined value must be present for each word line (WL), the fail bit map table occupies a large area on the chip.High Point, North Carolina High Point is the most populous city in the U.S. state of North Carolina and the county seat of Guilford County. In the 2010 census, High Point was the seventh-most populous city in the United States, with a population of 173,954, reflecting a
